Horned animals are shorter lived than those without horas, fierce longer than timid, and amphibious creatures longer than those which inhabit the air. The pike will continue to live for one hundred and fifty or or one hundred and seventy-five years, and the common turtle is good for at least a century. Passing up the scale of life to man, skipping the patriarchs, we find many recorded instances of extraordimary longevity.

The ancient Egyptians lived three times as long as the modern lotus eat times as long as the surprising and au-tientic longevity among the classic Greeks and Romans are not at all rare. Fig. notes the fact that in the reign of Emperor Vespasian (73 A. D.) there were 124 men living in a limited area on the River Po who were 160 years old and upward. Three of these were 140 and seven others over 130. Cicero's wife lived to be 103, and the Roman no ress Luceja played in public after she had celebrated her one hundred and twelfth birthday.
